DID YOU KNOW?

- 46% of Americans will exchange candy this Valentine’s Day. Talk about a sugar rush! This year, make an effort to cut down on food wrapper waste by nixing the candy and giving the gift of experience. Not only will it be healthier, but the memories will last a lifetime.
- In 2010, Americans purchased an estimated 198 MILLION roses for Valentine’s Day, most of which were landfilled a short time later. This year, consider a potted flowering plant instead of a bouquet. Not only will it cut down on waste, but it will remind your special someone of you every time they look at it.
- The EPA estimates that 90% of packaging is sent to landfills after just one use. What a waste! This year, consider locally produced food when planning your romantic dinner for two. Locally grown food tends to be healthier for you and have less packaging. Plus, you’ll be supporting our local economy. Now that’s love!
